Well it's that time of year again; time to start putting all those cold weather plans into action and start spending more time outdoors. Whether your plans involve time in the garden, or simply enjoying your outdoor living space, now is the time to protect your family and pets from the threat of Lyme disease.

New York is one of twelve states that account for 95% of all Lyme disease cases reported in the U.S. According to the NYS Department of Health the northeastern region which includes Warren, Washington, and Saratoga counties has one of the highest numbers of reported Lyme disease cases throughout New York State.

Studies also indicate deer and mice populations have a positive correlation with tick populations, and with an increase in the frequency of deer herds infringing on suburban neighborhoods, and suburban developments infringing on native deer habitat, now is the time to have your property treated.

During the warmer months ticks are actively seeking out hosts to feed on, this time period is critical when it comes to having your landscape protected. With cases of Lyme disease on the rise, now is more important than ever to contact Gould's and see what type of services we can offer you for the treatment and prevention of ticks. Let our arborist here at Gould's help you find comfort and security knowing your family and pets are safe from the threat of Lyme disease.

Gould's also offers treatments and prevention for mosquitoes and the threat of the West Nile Virus.
